The told me that Yamaha only provides them with an Electronic version PDF form and asked if that would be ok and I said yes.

He gave me an official looking Yamaha CD and I put the files on my home computer and Dropbox so I can access if I am on the road. When I bought my WR250R I requested a service manual from the shop. My guess is the dealer gave me one of their shop electronic manuals which is not for sale to their retail customers. They deserve to be paid for this work. When you buy a pirated copy you screw that manufacturer. Just like buying stolen computers or guns. You are a thief. Puff up and get offended. Or just pay what is still a fair price for a genuine manual that can be worth many, many times the price in certain situations. They could easily just make that available to their branded shops too. Cost of printing is pretty high, so paying for an online resource might be cheaper. As comfortable as I am on computers. I still like a paper manual when elbow deep in an engine or transmission or other complicated project! They deserve to be paid for this work. When you buy a pirated copy you screw that manufacturer. As comfortable as I am on computers, I still like a paper manual when elbow deep in an engine or transmission or other complicated project. Click to expand. The thought of me having a tablet nearby the bike when I am working on it sounds expensive. Not sure how they price out the manuals in the product development. I know that in Automotive the Service Manual development cost was typically factored into the vehicle development program and borne out by the Launch team. Currently I believe all of these are electronic copies. The hard copies I would image are priced on printing with a little mark up added on. I can see the issue with electronic copies as potentially impacting sales of these. There is a nice little off road organization that I ride with from time to time. Many of their DS rides are pretty nice and all the proceeds from these organized rides go to a charity organization. A friend of mine runs this group and I would bitch about the paper roll charts they would give to you when you arrived to register in at the morning of the ride. I asked why cant you use GPX files or email out the route directions ahead of time. then it hit me, how does he ensure that people will actually pay for the ride and not just show up with copies of files and ride the route. In the auto world in been over 20 years since Ive seen shop manuals in print form given to dealers. I get that Suzuki and other manufactures have to make a profit and its getting harder and harder to do with with regulations, tariffs and competition. I just dont see shop manuals as being the place to do so. I also am 98% of the time full of shit too. Roll charts also keep the route more private you dont get every Tom Dick and Harry running your route with a gpx file they got off ADVrider at later date pissing off locals and getting ordinances passed for loud pipes or banning bikes all together We assume they are making money, but how much is fair. Yes, they have to make the procedures anyway.

But they dont have to offer them to the public. Look at what a Haynes or Clymer manual costs. My Kawasaki manual is better, my Honda manuals are better. But its still the best one to use. I am sure that did not help his mood. lol. I am sure that did not help his mood. lol. Click to expand. Thats the short version of a story that will be told for at least 50 years Of course, since I always buy used bikes Id still have to buy the service manual, I doubt many would let the manual go with the bike when they sold it. My used DL1000 came with a CD copy of the factory service manual. Its a pirated copy. The entire service manual is one PDF file. Want to look up something in section 8 Figure on having a long coffee break just to get to section 8. Id rather have a factory manual in a ring binder. Easy to find what I need, copy the relevant pages for the task, keep the original greasy fingerprint free. Jathkajoe There are ways to convert the image file to a format that recognizes text, but you need a more sophisticated PDF reader than the simple readers freely available. Gustavo It only happens when slowing down from 20 mph to a 10mph then it goes away I removed the front tire and rechecked the balance but it still bounces. Im thinking the tire is out of round. I only have about 30 miles on them should I try to get them warranted or see if they will break in. It provides stepbystep instructions to help you successfully maintain, service or repair the Suzuki DL650 VStrom and SFV650 Gladius bikes. You can even perform a complete teardown and rebuild with confidence, as long as you have this book by your side. All of the instructions and procedures in this book include illustrations, diagrams, schematics and detailed exploded view based photos to help you understand exactly what needs to be done for each repair step. You have made a wise investment by selecting a bike with such popularity and market appeal.

You definitely need to protect your investment by following your maintenance and service schedules. You can do just that plus attack any repairs or rebuilds with this DIY guide in your possession. Id use this site again and recommend it to my motorcycle friends. But its better than the Clymer version. Why pay more No longer will you have to work blindly, make educated guesses or work on the advice of others. Beware of the CD version of the NON FACTORY service manual. Delivery with good package. I recommend purchasing a service manual here.
