Something like But for this you need to read the long version. Since reading the Error Handling Rationale and Proposal and using throws in Swift, I asked myself if this approach is explicit enough for my own modeling needs. For a language that tries to make almost every bit transformation as explicit as possible see Double.initexactly it looks unbalanced to me omitting error information from types. At least we can see the existence of errors via throws and try. For async operations and more explicit error handling it was clear to me that we need a Result type. The question was more concentrated on what is the defacto Result type on GitHub. In the end I ended up building my own on every project. So its nice to see the explicit error Result type beeing part of the standard library since Swift 5 Add Result to the Standard Library .

<https://formations.fondationmironroyer.com/en/node/13795>

Leading to code like this If you want to combine async operations and Result it gets even harder, but frameworks like ReactiveSwift or Combine can help us out with these but not RxSwift as it does not provide an error type variable in its Observable type. We started out with exceptions because they are a language feature and I know it would be burdensome to introduce Result or something like async Result with explicit error types. So we started to introduce all this Result chaining stuff which is not an easy step to do, but I came out with a solution that encodes errors as types explicitly and also is quite comfortable at converting error types. It just has the type of the whole enum. If we want to convert a specific error case into a successful value comparable to catching it, the resulting error type is not able to represent the now missing error case. What are your ideas. I'm curious. I'm not sure this is the best solution for throwing, but there are often cases where I want to reuse a set of enum cases in another enum, for example. That's what I meant. Would be good to know what speaks against this.

This allows the user to findtheir Tcode easily without looking for it in the menus or memorizing it.There are different methods on adding favorites to your user ID.Folders donot have to be created.

The user can then drag and drop the Tcodes into the appropriate folders. Enter a folder name and click on the green check mark. Make sure your cursor is highlighting where you want the folder to be placed under. After adding folders, the Tcodes are organized by a way the user feels comfortable looking for transactions. Managing Your Favorites 7 May 2008 For example, FIAA Tcode says FIAA Information System. To change a favorite's description, single click on the favorite to highlight it. Right mouse click and change the description. Highlight the Tcode by single clicking on it. Any Microsoft product excel, word or powerpoint can be added. The file can only be accessed when the drive associated to it is available. For example, if a file from the local C drive is added, it will only be available when logged on to that machine. Double click on the document to launch it. Managing Your Favorites 13 May 2008 Below are the standard settings for this tab. CONUS bases should have the box to the left of "Documents only in local currency" flagged so that all transactions will be displayed in USD. The variants in the section "Screen templates and line layout variant for document entry" can be changed to your personal preferences. Use the dropdown boxes for suggestions. May 2008 14 Editing Options If the user wants them to come in selected, they would uncheck this box. It is recommended that the items come in unselected because if the user has to double click on the individual line items, it is more likely that the user will double check that they are clearing the correct line items. Everything else on this screen should remain as is. The screen on the following page shows the recommended settings for this tab.

On the next tab, the only recommended setting change would be the ALV Classic List versus the ALV Grid control radio buttons. Changing this setting is a personal choice for presentation only. May 2008 16 Editing Options This process is enabled from entirely within the SAP environment without the necessity of going outside the system. This part of The Business Workplace is called SAP Mail and is, in fact, an internal email system. The Business Workplace has six working environments for processing documents and messages. The working environments are as follows and are flagged with symbols. Working Environment Description Inbox Under Documents, you find all the documents sent to you and their resubmissions. Under Unread Documents, you will find only those documents which you have not yet read. They are, however, displayed in the lower right preview window. Outbox Under Documents, you will find an overview and other information about the documents sent to you. Resubmissions Under Documents, you will find the documents that are to be resubmitted to the user's inbox at a later date. Private Folders Folder structure that you create yourself to manage documents, lists, messages, etc. Subscribed Folders The folders that you subscribe to are listed here. We are not using this function at the present time. Trash Folder Deleted folders, documents, lists and messages are stored here temporarily and you have the option of reversing the deletion. The entry into your personal workplace is through opening SAP Easy Access Menu Tree as shown below. May 2008 18 Business Work Place The upper right window is a listing of the documents and the lower right is a preview window of the document that has the focus in the window above. By double clicking on the document title, the entire document is opened and any attachments made available to the user.

May 2008 20 Business Work Place The SAP definition of Express mail means that as long as the recipient is in the SAP system, they will be notified that mail awaits them. This notification will show on their screens as illustrated below. May 2008 22 Business Work Place This code also forms the basis of the asset numbers of the assets assigned to that asset class. The asset class also determines the general ledger account assignment for the assets throughout their lifecycle. Assets created under any asset class must have cost centers that map to RAMCAS department 00. Upon saving the asset, the next sequential number in the relevant number range is assigned to the asset. The asset number ranges are used by each company code independently so the same asset number can be used in different company codes for different assets. The asset shell contains only the minimum amount of information to actually save the record in the system. It contains only the asset description, depreciation settings useful life and location cost center, responsible cost center, etc..

The asset shell is assigned an asset number by the system so that it is ready to receive postings into its subledger. Without postings the asset shell has no financial impact on the general ledger. It is simply an object waiting for an acquisition or transfer. When purchasing an asset using a purchase order, the asset number must be assigned to the PO item using the account assignment. This will enable the receiving agent to post acquisition value to the asset subledger through the goods receipt transaction. When the goods receipt is entered, the asset master record will also be updated with certain information such as quantity and supplier. At this moment the asset shell can be considered a complete asset master record. Also, at time of goods receipt both the asset subledger and the general ledger are updated with the acquisition value. Asset Transactions Every asset posting transaction is assigned to a transaction type.

Disposed assets can be returned to service.

May 2008 30 Overview All asset classes are assigned to a number range that uses internal number assignment. This asset number is also the account number of the individual asset account. The asset number is required when creating a purchase order that is for a fixed asset or posting in Accounts Payable. These values are just defaults and can be changed.

May 2008 32 Asset Master Data Asset master records are created at the company code level. Assets are not shared across company codes. Number of Similar Defaults to 1. This field indicates the number of asset master records that Assets will be created. If more than one, then each asset master record created may need to be modified to input unique characteristics of that asset like serial no., inventory no., quantity. Reference Asset If there is an asset with similar master data, you can enter that asset in this field. SAP will default all of the values from that referenced asset which will save keystrokes. The data in any field can always be changed Reference Sub Enter the subnumber of the referenced asset if applicable. If this box is selected, it forces an asset section for more capitalization date to be entered on the next screen. The capitalization date details must be in a prior fiscal year.

Asset Master Data 33 May 2008 For example, a Ford Truck should be entered as Truck Ford F150 and not Ford Truck F150. This will allow searches by truck regardless of the make and model. A list of examples is located in a table below. Description2 Informational field only. This description does not print on reports. Do not enter a model number if this asset is a main asset that is going to have subs. A subasset will always have the main asset's description as the model number even if you type the model number in on the subasset. SAP will always overwrite what you enter. Account Defaults from the asset class.

The account determination determines the Determination general ledger GL accounts that will be posted to with asset transactions, e.g. acquisitions, retirements, depreciation. GL accounts can not be changed. Serial Number Enter the serial number once it is known, as it is probably not known at the time the shell is created. Once the serial number is known, use the Change Asset Tcode AS02 to input the serial number. Inventory Number Leave blank at the time of creating the shell. SAP will fill in this field with the SAP generated asset number. This field will print on the bar code labels. Refer to the bar code section in this manual. Quantity Leave blank. This field will be populated when the purchase order is received. Unit of Measure Defaults to EA for each. Manage Historically SAP will default this to be active to ensure an asset cannot be archived until it is deactivated. Capitalized on Leave blank. The system enters the asset value date of the first posting that results in the capitalization of the asset in this field. The depreciation start date is based on this date. First Acquisition on The system automatically sets the asset value date of the first acquisition posting in this field. Acquisition Year The system enters the fiscal year of the first acquisition posting in this field.

Asset Master Data 35 May 2008 In order for you to be able to make correction postings after an asset has been deactivated, you can manually change the deactivation date in the asset master record. This field is also used to determine the status of the asset. The status of an asset is used in many reports. If the asset has a deactivation date, it will not appear on some asset reports. Planned Retirement You can specify a date here for the planned retirement date of the asset. In the standard report, the system simulates the depreciation, if requested, only up to the planned retirement date of the asset.

Ordered on The system enters the date the first purchase order was posted to an asset. Depreciation Area Display only field. Depreciation key valuation key controls the valuation of the asset in the particular depreciation area. It consists of a calculation key for the automatic calculation of depreciation and various control indicators. Useful Life Yr. SAP will default values in this field based on the asset class. Useful life in years over which the asset is to be depreciated. If this default is not correct, enter the useful life recommended by policy. Useful Life Period Useful life in periods in addition to whole years over which the asset is to be depreciated. Prepaid minor property must use this field if amortization is less than one year 1 to 11 months. ODep.Start Display only field. Defaults from the capitalization date when the first acquisition is posted. This is the depreciation calculation start date. NOTE For 1 year useful life in minor property, enter 1 year and not 12 months. May 2008 36 Asset Master Data First, the description should proceed left to right from the generic to the specific. All information should be in capital letters, no punctuation such as periods, commas, or quotation marks should be used, but slashes are permitted. There are two lines that can be used for the description; each line has up to 50 characters. Below is a list of some basic asset descriptions. Please follow these examples when creating the asset shell. TON JACK JACK 2 TON 50" PLASMA RCA TV 50IN PLASMA RCA 50" COLOR TELEVISION TV 50IN RCA OKIDATA PRINTER 9 PIN PRINTER OKIDATA The ML360T is model. Some asset classes require the cost center to have an activity of 00. If this is the case, you can use responsible cost center to show where the asset is for reporting purposes. In most cases the cost center and responsible cc will be the same. Asset Master Data 39 May 2008 Center It will not carry the depreciation cost.
