The front gates of every military base from California to New York were haunted by protesters anxious to insert a few flowers into the barrels of our rifles. Included were industrial contractors, journalists, bankers, import and export companies, mine workers, postal clerks, intelligence and State Department personnel, and a variety of other people whose employers were encouraged by the DOA to have their Vietnambound employees receive preRVN indoctrination.

They acted liked they were afraid the ODgreen color of our uniforms would rub off on their golf shirts and corduroy pants. Other civilians, who realized they might need the protection of a few GIs one day, were openly cordial and circulated among us. They seemed very sympathetic to the fact that although all of us were going to be spending time in the same country, GIs were pulling 100% greater hazardous duty but getting 1,000% less pay. Even though we were on active duty and closer to the source than anyone outside the military, our information about Vnam was no greater than that of any wellinformed civilian. After finally arriving in Vnam we learned that the DOA had intentionally kept us uninformed. They must have suspected a lot more GIs would run to Canada had they known what Nam was really like before they got there. Among some of the subjects were field maneuvers, combat readiness drills, weapons training, personal hygiene, malaria prevention, helicopter boarding and debording, water purification, and of course, the subject most of the men were interested in hearing about, VD. 1 I was surprised to discover there were a million tiny details separating one ROT MOS from another. For example, Armored specialists were taught techniques on how to keep their tanks and armored personnel carriers APCs cool in Vietnams hot climate. The RTT ROT didnt teach us that. The 2foot deep crater left by the blast left me convinced that marijuana could be as hazardous to your health as a punjistick. This, however, did not motivate them to work any faster. Each infantry MOS had its own ROT class. After attending several of them I concluded they should have been required attendance for everyone going to Vietnam. Everyone who missed out was deprived of literally 100s of valuable experiences passed down by combat veterans whose hardearned skills helped them survive countless situations.

Many of those experiences, which could only have been passed on by wordofmouth, may have saved a lot of lives if everyone had known about them. To help facilitate a grunts combat readiness, a tiny mockup of a Vnamese village was built. They believed if you made it past 7 S and Ds you stood a good chance of making it past 70, or 700. I realized after my first raid that it really didnt matter how many practice runs I went through, having to do one in reallife was more than enough for one lifetime. After spreadeagling him to the bed, they would shove a glass thermometer into his dick and push it all the way down to his balls. Although it was in the GI Code never to give up trying to escape capture, I wondered if the Army preferred that all POWs kill themselves so a postwar Administration wouldnt have to go through the compromising process of buying us back from a profitminded enemy government. Although the thought didnt seem to be above the integrity of some Army officers, nothing from an official source, directly or indirectly, indicated the DOA preferred that POWs commit suicide. Although 5th Group RVN members took their ROT at Ft Bragg, Special Forces ROT classes were given on most training posts for Green Berets who took additional AIT training after completing their Special Forces training. We dont interrogate prisoners, we give them an opportunity to blab before terminating their misery. We dont screw natives, we toss her one of Charlies sawedoff thigh bones and tell her to have fun on her own time. Most of the subliminal propaganda neatly inserted into the supplemental films and reading material were so obvious their inclusions would have been absurd had the Army not considered them necessary to employ. The Army knew it would be dangerous for its troops to have too much time to seriously think about what they were actually letting themselves in for.

By the time ROT ended, the feverpitched, roundtheclock lectures and exercises, added to the 15 or so vaccinations swimming around inside our bodies, made us feel as if wed played in a dozen Superbowls. Unfortunately, because the racial prejudice blacks complained about in Vnam had by this time become a natural way of life over there, the addition of this subject did little to reduce tensions as the new personnel who attended the class made their way across the pond. When arriving there everyone learned quickly the best way to survive was to go along with the program. One was the fact that the class was being given here in the States, not in Vnam where it was really needed. Open racism by a white commissioned and noncommissioned officer on American soil was already a well established nono. Skilled racists in the states had by now learned to be subtle about their dirty work. Another reason was the fact that whites who attended the class continued to avoid intermingling with blacks, banding together among themselves as they always had. Probably the most decisive reason was the fact that blacks made up almost 50% of ROT, a new experience for both black and white servicemen. One black GI even opinionated that the liberal attitude expressed by some of the whites during class was because they probably felt intimidated by the extraordinarily large numbers of blacks. Blacks who found it refreshing to be around more of their own people also found seeing so many in the group headed for Vnam a gross imbalance. Other blacks, more sensitive to the issue, cynically felt the large percentage of all minorities going to Vnam was an intentional plan devised by the Pentagon and the White House. Outside of wealthy blacks like Wilt Chamberlain and Sammy Davis Jr. Nixon was unable to attract the black political leaders he needed. During that conversation we were to learn something we hadn't been aware of before.

It was to be a history lesson regarding the first general black participation in Americas foreign wars. The lesson was to come from a white GI who knew more about blacks than we did. Leaning against a nearby wall was a young white GI staring at us. Dragging on a cigarette, he waved. We didn't wave back. He looked like he'd been dragged out from under a rug. His clothes were wrinkled, his blonde hair uncombed, and he needed a shave. He had a large peace medallion hanging from a shirt pocket and his gold Second Lieutenant bars looked like they'd never been polished. Apparently unworried about a senior officer chastising him for his appearance, both Harry and I figured he had to be a general's son or Jesus Christ's little brother. He looked ready to deck the guy. Raising his arm, I pulled it down. The slightest irritation and we were ready to fight. That's why brothers adapt faster and kick more ass in Nam. Calling for everyone to return to the classroom, our conversation was cut off. As the 3 of us started to walk in, Harry tugged at my arm holding me back. The circle of our association would close for us there. The eye opening lessons he taught me at Ft Gordon and Bien Hoa will always be remembered. It was a good idea for the Army to save this particular lecture until the end. It would have been a hard act for anyone to follow. His severe limp was evident of an injury he had received in Vietnam. The scars on his face were worse. His left eye was disfigured and barely visible. Both his eyebrow and eyelash were completely gone. Half of his mouth appeared to have been torn off and clumsily reattached. He had obviously been through more than his share of the war and contracted more than his share of Vietnamitis. It was considered to be the worst disease a GI could catch. The only way to prevent getting it was complete avoidance of Vietnam. But as the speaker got into his speech it became evident they were there to add official impact. But his speech was completely different.

His solemn expression and monotone voice seemed almost mannequinlike. Although after what he'd been through very few things were probably funny. Least of all sex, which for him must've been hard to come by. Did you know they eat dogs and cats over there. But it was obvious the statement was made to inspire anyone in the audience who had problems getting along with the opposite race to bury their domestic squabbles and unite against a foreign race with cultural differences as well. I carried 75. and if you get caught by the VC, don't wait for them to do to you what they did to me. His joke made me realize that there were a lot of people in this country who seriously believed every word the veteran spoke. Many of those people were either running the country or in a very influential position with those who did. They were also very willing to send everybody else's kids but their own to Vietnam. But I couldn't complain, I volunteered. His act just couldn't be surpassed. After finishing his lecture he stepped back from the podium and saluted the audience. After being escorted offstage a Chaplain was quickly brought out to lead the audience in a prayer asking God to make our victory in Vnam expedient and with as little loss of American life as possible. As he spoke I wondered how many of these group prayers had been given since the start of the war and how many men who prayed in them were now having prayers spoken over them at Arlington. Whatever the number was, their prayers had either fallen on deaf ears or God was working on the side of the North Vietnamese. Because up to now none of them had worked. Most of us were already tired of Vnam and ready for a vacation. I would arrive in the Republic of South Vnam partly confused, partly mystified, and not totally believing I was actually there. The difference between whether Vnam frequently entered their dreams, or became nightmares, depended how afraid one was of going. They didnt wake up when they got to Nam.

For the next 365 days they drifted deeper into it. For many of those guys the nightmare would never end. For others it would simply be subdued and held in check. For me, I decided not to let Vnam be any more stressful than Basic Training. I told myself I would try to make the war both a lesson and experience. I told myself if anyone ever had reason to question my behavior, Id be so old theyd have to call it senility. Boxed with manual.
